

ANNETTE KELLERMAN FEATURE IS OFFERED

"King Neptune's Daughter,"
Beautiful Allegorical Film,
Showing at Orpheum.

All who have seen "Neptune's Daughter" in which Annette Kellerman is pictured, declare that it is by no means wonderful to them how she changes from a mermaid into a mortal. Annette Kellerman is so perfectly at home in the water that she is a veritable daughter of Neptune, god of the ocean and ruler of the deep. She swims with the ease of one whose natural element is the sea. "Neptune's Daughter," which is showing today at the Orpheum theater, is the most gorgeous pageant of sea and land, and is a masterpiece of photography. Submarine grottoes, ocean caves, long stretches of surf, sandy beaches and bold headlands are seen and chief of all the daughter of Neptune whose adventures on land and sea are woven into a wonderful fairy story. It cost nearly a million dollars and took 8,000 feet of film to make the pictures, which were filmed in the Bermudas.

Kitty Gordon is to appear in picture dramas again.

The newest, costliest and most magnificent Annette Kellerman film production, "A Daughter of the Gods," which is rated as one of the big film classics, is showing today at the Robinson Grand theater with symphony orchestra accompaniment. The offering is of such importance that it will be presented there the rest of the week.

Taking as the locale for one of the many impressive scenes in this vivid fantasy, an island at Kingston, Jamaica, William Fox, the producer, developed an arid spot into a city that spelled the wealth, pomp and magnificence of the Orient. For a short period of usefulness there was created the domain of a mythical sultan, its minaret topped palaces and imposing edifices standing out against the horizon as convincingly as though they had existed for ages. The city cost $350,000 and was peopled by 20,000 persons, but for some idea of the titanic undertaking that eventually became known as "A Daughter of the Gods."

Hay Irwin is to appear in a new play called "Friend Wife."

The new Mary Miles Minter five-reel Mutual Star production, entitled "A Dream or Two Ago," which was produced at the American studios under the direction of Little Mary's own director, James Kirkwood, is the feature today at the Bijou. It is a very pretty dramatic story, filled with laughs and tears. "Lovely Mary," as this dainty little actress has become known the country over, was given a great opportunity to display her convincing mannerisms in this production and she made the most of it. There are not many of us that can imagine this little girl playing the part of a girl who has been in the New York underworld. Yet this is just the characterization that she was called upon to give in her newest production.

Richard Bennett is resting and his play, "Zack," is being rewritten.

Morris Streeter's travesty on "Faust," entitled "A Night in Japan" was the bill presented by the Streeter Musical Tabloid Company at the Palace last evening. The comedy is one of the cleverest satires ever seen in the city and it is produced by the Streeter company in a manner that would do credit to very much larger organizations.

Mr. Streeter's "Mephisto" was as clever a bill of acting as we have seen on the Palace stage. The innocent (?) Marguerite by Blanche Bryant was a clever portrayal. Her gowns were very elaborate. Mr. Carlyle made a capital "Michael Faust" and Mr. Wallner's "Fritz Siebel" was very good. Mrs. Foster as "Mrs. Faust" was funny. The chorus did excellent work both as to singing and dancing. Many novelties were introduced with elaborate costumes, and were especially good. The stage settings and musical effects were very elaborate—in fact a more perfect performance would be hard to find.

The same play will be given this evening. A complete change of program tomorrow night when "The $50,000 Beauty" will be presented. The Streeter company is without a doubt the best musical show that has ever visited the Palace.

The Baseball Inevitable. You can quarrel against it, you can holl the drinking water; You can drain the swamps and marshes, you can even smother with a blotter. You can pulverize all the flies, you can kill off all the skeeters. You can take all known precautions against germs and such like creatures. All your efforts will be futile, for when winter comes at last, There's a scourge of baseball rumors, just as always in the past.

Sports of Presidents. This is the sixtieth birthday of Woodrow Wilson, once the able shortstop of the Princeton nine. It is difficult to get a real line on the president as a ball player, and, anyway, it doesn't make much difference, because there is no hope of any club getting him, and he is too old for any regular team, except possibly Minneapolis. Of course, the old boys of Princeton now swear that Mr. Wilson was a wonderful ball player, but none of 'em admit that while a great fielder, he was rather weak in hitting. He was never given a trial by a big league club, but Connie Mack wasn't managing a team then. The president is a keen baseball fan, but golf now holds first place in his affections. Being a Scotch descent, it is natural that he should take kindly to the "Scotch croquet," and he has developed into a fair player.

Mr. Taft is also addicted to golf, and, like his successor, an enthusiastic baseball fan. Col. Roosevelt, while he likes baseball, is fonder of football, which he played at college, and would rather see a good boxing match than any kind of ball game. The colonel is still able to put up a good argument with the gloves. He is fonder of doing than seeing, and of all sports his favorite is hunting. President Wilson holds a Virginia hunting license, and most of his predecessors were fond of the sport, but the Colonel surpasses them all as a Nimrod. Washington and Jefferson, and a number of the other early presidents, were deer hunters, but Roosevelt is the only occupant of the White House who has bagged lions, elephants and other big African game.

Washington, Lincoln, Garfield and Cleveland were the most ardent of the presidential disciples of old Frank Walton.

John Henry. John Henry, who has been backstopping for Washington for the last seven seasons, is twenty-eight years old today. Henry was born in Amherst, Mass., and it was while he was a student at Amherst College that he made his first reputation as a ball player. After closing his college career in 1910 he joined the Senators, then under the guidance of James A. McAleer. He was used as a sub that season, but in 1911 he figured in eighty-five games, as catcher and first baseman. Since then he has taken his regular turn behind the bat. Henry took part in more games this year than in any previous season, and also hung up his highest batting average, .246 in 117 games.
